Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y. (AP) - The mayor of a suburban New York town is proposing a plan to inject deer with birth control to contain their population.

Hastings-on-Hudson Mayor Peter Swiderski tells The New York Times that he plans to submit a formal application within a month to the state Department of Environmental Conservation.

Tufts University's Center for Animals and Public Policy Director Dr. Allen Rutberg says the vaccine can control the population using the animal's immune system to prevent fertilization.

Rutberg says the deer need to be tranquilized, tagged and injected once every two years.

The Hudson Valley town is about 2 square miles and there are an estimated 70 to 120 deer there. That's far more than what is considered tolerable.

BIRTH CONTROL

Deer Birth Control is Coming, So Look Out for Debauched Deer Orgies

THANKS, OBAMA: our hard-earned tax dollars are now going towards supplying the wanton deer of the New York City suburbs with whore pills. (Side note: if anyone is interested, I'm amenable to developing The Wanton Deer of the New York City Suburbs as a new Real Housewives-esque franchise).

Anyways, now the doe population can continue to fornicate all through the temperate deciduous forest, regardless of whether or not their fellow Americans agree with their lifestyle choices. According to the New York Times, Hastings-on-Hudson, NY, mayor Peter Swiderski is implementing experimental immunocontraception (a process that uses an animal's own immune system to prevent it from fertilizing offspring) in order to combat deer overpopulation — a huge problem in suburban New England, where deer-related car accidents are becoming increasingly common and Lyme disease dangerously rampant. Also they are eating all the tulips.

Mayor Swiderski tried to encourage a few methods before settling on contraception, including hunting (impractical and dangerous) and netting the deer and then sending them to a slaughterhouse (a cruel method that resulted in a doctored photograph of Swiderski with a Hitler mustache making rounds on the Internet). Quoting the famous old adage, he notes that deer-murder sabotage is easy: "It only takes a few people with vials of coyote urine to drive

NY village trying birth control to trim deer herd

JIM FITZGERALD | August 3, 2013 01:31 PM EST | AP

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. — This suburban village overlooking the Hudson River is a mere 2 square miles, home to a hip downtown, neighborhoods of neatly kept homes and an ever-growing population of deer that overrun woods, chew through gardens and cause more than a dozen car crashes a year.

Grasping for a way to control the deer without hunting the animals, leaders of this village of 7,900 have proposed an ambitious compromise to shoot them up — not with bullets but with birth control.

Scientists and humane groups hope the program, which seeks to capture and inject female white-tailed deer with a contraceptive made from pigs' ovaries, can become a model for other places that are too congested or compassionate to consider killing.

"We're hearing all about 'Don't kill Bambi' and all the jokes about deer condoms," Mayor Peter Swiderski said. "People are having their little chuckles. But deer have a pretty big negative effect on the community."

Under the plan, which will begin this winter if approved by the state Department of Environmental Conservation, as many as 90 percent of the does in Hastings will be tranquilized, inoculated with the contraceptive, then tagged and released. The deer population is estimated at up to 120, a density of 60 per square mile. That's three times the deer density that some studies have tied to a decline in plant and animal species.

The goal is a 35 to 40 percent reduction in five years.

Stephanie Boyles Griffin, a senior director at the Humane Society of the United States, said, "There are thousands of communities in the U.S. that are looking for alternative ways to manage the deer populations." If successful, she said, "Hastings would be the first open suburb in the U.S. to manage deer exclusively through the use of immunocontraception."

NY village trying birth control to trim deer herd

By JIM FITZGERALD
Associated Press
Published: Saturday, Aug. 3, 2013 - 10:31 am

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. -- A suburban New York village has a birth control plan — for deer.

It plans to inject females with a contraceptive made from pigs' ovaries.

Hastings-on-Hudson Mayor Peter Swiderski says he's hoping for a reduction of 35 to 40 percent in the deer population over five years.

HASTINGS-ON-HUDSON, N.Y. -- This suburban village overlooking the Hudson River is a mere 2 square miles, home to a hip downtown, neighborhoods of neatly kept homes and an ever-growing population of deer that overrun woods, chew through gardens and cause more than a dozen car crashes a year.

Grasping for a way to control the deer without hunting the animals.
